

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am writing to apply for a Personal Support Worker position with your organization. I recently finished my PSW certification at Centennial College, and during my training I worked in two very different settings. One was an acute care hospital on a palliative unit, and the other was a long-term care home in a dementia unit. Both gave me experience I am ready to bring to your team.

At Centenary Hospital, part of Scarborough Health Network, I worked on a busy ward and made sure every change in a patient's condition was reported right away. I did not miss a single report during my whole placement, because I checked on patients often and stayed in close contact with the nurses. I also supported patients and families going through end-of-life care, including patients receiving Medical Assistance in Dying. I worked closely with the care team and always followed proper infection control steps to keep patients safe and comfortable.

At Seven Oaks Long Term Care Home, I worked in a locked dementia unit with 32 residents, and I was responsible for 7 of them each day. I used the Gentle Persuasive Approach along with validation and redirection to calm residents when they became upset or confused. This helped keep the unit calm and kept residents safe and comfortable. I also kept clear and accurate notes every shift. Before becoming a PSW, I completed a diploma in Software Development at Vanier College, and that background helps me feel very comfortable using electronic health records and writing clear, organized notes.

I currently hold Standard First Aid and CPR certification, WHMIS training, a Vulnerable Sector Screening, and the Worker Health and Safety Awareness in 4 Steps certificate. I speak English and Nepali fluently, and I also have some knowledge of Mandarin and French, which helps me connect with patients from different backgrounds. I can start work right away and would love the chance to talk with you about how my experience in acute care, palliative care, and dementia care could be useful to your team.

Thank you for taking the time to read my application. I have attached my resume and would be happy to answer any questions or come in for an interview whenever works for you.

Sincerely,

Sajjan Gautam
